

Jeremiah Gaster is a Ph.D. Candidate in Political Studies at York University. He is both a political theorist and a comparativist, and as such is deeply interested in the study of both everyday life and the totalities and relations of power that structure everyday life. He is also interested in the art of writing, and in giving the world to one's children better than it was given to him.