

Bob Kurik is assistant professor in the Department of Social and Cultural Ecology at Charles University in Prague. He was a Fulbright Fellow at UCLA (2013/2014). He received his Ph.D. (2015) in anthropology from Charles University based on his ethnographic research among militant activists from Germany. His dissertation titled Revolutionary Amoebas: Political versatility as the Art of Resistance in Germany explores amoebic subjectivity of left radicals in post-revolutionary times. His main areas of anthropological interest involve protest, self, ecology and the Internet.
